

So this instructor has missed her opportunity. She has failed to enlighten those she teaches by not relating the message of Shelley's sonnet to their lives. Under this circumstance, though they may affect to despise the transient symbols of the dictator's might, they will never learn to acknowledge and to deal with their own desires for these symbols. or their equivalents.

Not through hatred of the external dictator but through understanding of the dictator within each of us can we really do away with dictators who must otherwise arise to plague us generation after generation. But the mere removal of one external dictator will not prevent another from coming into being.

But a beautiful civilization must remain beyond our reach if we fail to thoroughly explore in school the subject matter that is presented. There is no possibility that the true meaning of this inscription is that men of power and great wealth after, at the last, all the futility of all their accomplishments and as a warning to others came the final lesson of their vanity or their monument that those who would follow in their path may not be trapped by the same illusion which is followed by inevitable dissipation. This is only a view but it is possible and being so, should not be discarded without consideration - being to the effect that a man who has built upon a monumental scale must suffer in apprehending the futility of his strivings. And in this understanding, he learns to make known his mission as an example to persuade others to take a different and a better course. In other words: the message me: learn from what has happened to my achievements that you may not desire to emulate or to surpass them. Time, you, will deal with you as with mine.
